University and community interaction to change

Mayor, Rector deliver timely addresses

by Donna Varrica

Rector Patrick Kenniff ended last week's Fourth International Urban Universities Conference with an encouraging blueprint for increased co-operation between the university, the local community and the wider international community.

Speaking to delegates in the D.B. Clarke Theatre last Friday, Kenniff stressed that promoting interrelationships could reverse the urban trend of increasing polarization and conflict. For the university to be effective in the larger context of the community, the rector said, it must encourage greater interdisciplinary co-operation internally.

Co-operation between the university and its city traditionally indicates economic factors, Kenniff said, but a healthy community promotes other links drawn from its vitality.

University acts as critic

"Within the community, the university must act as a critic of the barriers, the walls and divisions that plague our society to bring together social, cultural and economic groups. It should act as an incubator of social relationships and urban strategy," he said.

The Rector said that problems that confront urban society also challenge the global city. The university could lend insight applying urban thought to the international challenge of breaking down barriers, taking a cue from the European Community which in unifying 12 countries by 1992 must reconcile economic, social and cultural differences without eliminating them.

Technology needs not isolate

Foremost among the priorities of urban universities, Kenniff said, is to maintain their accessibility by providing a conducive environment, curriculum and flexibility of schedule which appeal to different social, cultural and economic groups and individuals of all ages and gender.

Another topic of concern at the conference was technology as a potentially isolating tool. In his closing remarks, Kenniff said that technology "should be a support system, not an invitation to abandon fundamental skills."

Terry Byrnes, the invisible man

by Theresa Killoran

Creative writing professor Terry Byrnes approaches photography in much the same way as he approaches writing. Hidden beneath the dark cloth of his old-fashioned four-by-four camera, he eventually produces a beautiful, detailed photograph. Bashful and modest, Byrnes has the thoughtful, unassuming intellect of a man who conceals himself behind the precise objectivity of his art. "I prefer to be the invisible man," he says.

Byrnes, 40, has been teaching at Concordia since 1975. In 1980, he published his Master's thesis, a collection of short stories entitled Wintering Over. In 1981, he edited Matinees Daily, another collection of stories. But most of his writing time is devoted to freelance journalism.

Married for 20 years and the father of a 6-year-old, he says "Circumstances have forced me to lead a somewhat boring, dollar-oriented and security-oriented life. If I can buy that week's groceries by selling an article... then that's what I do."

But his work with the Creative Writing department is well appreciated. Students find him easy-going and approachable, although his intelligence and his wealth of knowledge can be intimidating. Creative Writing professor Gary Geddes says Byrnes has a good sense of the craft, a good eye and the ability to see the nuances of prose.

Byrnes seems to have taken it to heart that a friend once called him a rustic, but he has come a long way and seems remarkably content. He is developing the notion of Verdun as a home — something he lacked as a child whose working class parents were constantly on the move. He recalls the rejection he felt when his family moved to Miami. "If I'd always been inclined to be an outsider, there I was an outsider by force."

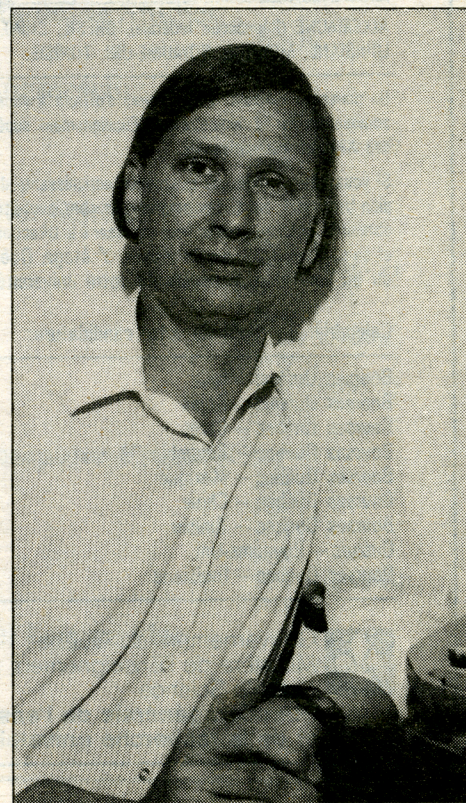

He went on to use a trade school electronics diploma to put himself through a "rich kids" university in Ohio. Then, ever resourceful, he began to write.

Byrnes writes "whatever comes down the pipe" — stories about old-fashioned Montréal taverns, the adult craze for comic books, articles on dog-food recipes and bubble gum, "utterly boring" photographs for Photo Life, and two chapters in a book (written overnight) about John Lennon which earned him over $1,000.

"I've also worked in the skin trade in Montreal," Byrnes says, "I've written sex adventure stories." His writing never involves sexual violence. "I participate in a compassionate way in what's going on in what I'm writing.... It's not as though I've done a kind of writing that makes me feel ethically or morally queasy in any way."

He finds it hard to encourage students to stick to such a difficult profession, but points out that endurance is perhaps even more important than talent.

With University obligations and freelancing on the side, Byrnes has little time for his passion, creative writing. He is so sensitive about accurately understanding and portraying the fictional world he is creating that he has discarded much of the work he has done on two novels. Perhaps it is this attention to detail which makes him describe himself as slow, unproductive and incapable of working with deadlines. "Though literature is for me probably the most expressive and rewarding form, spending a hundred hours on a short story that makes me $200 is not something that I can do."

To the Editor:

We were pleased to read that Professor Ian Irvine shares CUFA's concern over the Administration's desire to eliminate career development increments for the faculty after a certain salary level. It would indeed be, as he puts it, an "inequitable and shortsighted move."

His other concern, however, about CUFA's workload proposal, is misplaced. Our intention is not to do away with the "existing flexible system," which, by the way, already stipulates a norm of four courses per academic year, "where there is clear evidence of productivity in research and scholarship."

Our aim, rather, is to correct certain anomalies that have crept into the Administration's interpretation of this clause; namely their apparent conviction that all faculty members are obliged to teach six courses unless they can convince their dean that their research activity warrants one or two course remissions.

Our belief is that everyone should start with four courses and those who prefer to teach rather than conduct research can take on up to two additional courses. However, it should be departmental guidelines, rather than a dean's opinion, which would determine whether additional courses are appropriate.

Our proposal introduces into the process the kind of collegiality that University Administrators always pay lip service to, but do not always practice. That, in essence, is the difference between CUFA's and the Administration's positions.

We would be pleased to address any other concerns through the medium of the CUFA Negotiations Newsletter.

BOG approves funds for library addition

6,000 sq. metres to be added for $12.2 million

The Board of Governors has approved financing for the $12.2 million addition that will be built atop the downtown Library building.

The four-storey addition (along the Mackay Street side of the six-storey structure) will increase the size of the building by 6,000 net square metres.

The new space is being built to help Concordia consolidate its scattered downtown rental facilities, but it will not result in a net space gain for the downtown campus. The four floors will house existing Concordia departments currently located in rented annexes. In terms of functionality and quality, however, the new facility will be a considerable improvement over existing conditions in many of the annexes.

The Library building (including the addition) will open in the fall of 1992. The University is currently awaiting approval from Québec City before issuing tenders for the construction of Phase Two of the project.

At their regular monthly meeting last week the governors also approved the revised version of the new Academic Code of Conduct that was approved by Senate September 15th. The new code will take effect next June and apply to all graduate and undergraduate students

Gross applauds PSBGM program for prevention of STDs

This week the Toronto Board of Education announced that it was putting condom machines into its high schools. The logic goes that if condoms are more financially and psychologically accessible, teenagers are more likely to use them. The Protestant School Board of Greater Montreal (PSBGM), however, has taken a different tack. It's called Postponing Sexual Involvement and was developed at Stanford University in Palo Alto, California. PSI is a pilot program which teaches students to know their feelings and know how to say 'no' to sexual activity, despite media and peer pressure. According to evaluations done by the PSBGM, PSI has been a big success with both girls and boys, and the school board is developing the program for use in its English and French schools. Pauline Gross, co-ordinator of Concordia's certificate program in Family Life Education and Community Services, has taught family life education for 20 years and she lauds the program.

Gross: "I think PSI is real prevention because it creates an awareness in teenagers about their sexuality and how to deal with it before the time comes to decide if they want to be sexually active. I feel that programs offering education for prevention in the face of a disease with no cure, like AIDS, are desperately needed today."

"I commend the PSBGM for that kind of education because it makes adolescents aware first and lets them think through how to say 'no.' My feeling is that with this sort of education it will become cool for adolescents to say 'no.'"

Gross says that through role-playing exercises adolescents can find the words and actions they need in a specific situation.

"I would recommend PSI not only for high schools but also for elementary schools. Children begin to develop from about grade 5 so that's the time to start discussing the physiological and emotional changes, how to enjoy and respect one's body as well as respecting others."

Gross recalls one response her female pupils suggested for use with an eager suitor: "When a boy says to a girl: 'If you loved me you'd do it.' One of the choice responses for the girl is: 'if you really loved me you wouldn't ask.'"

AT A GLANCE

Update on Employment Equity

With the summer now over and the fall term well underway, it seems appropriate to bring the University community up-to-date on the Employment Equity Program (Programme d'accès à l'égalité en emploi). There have been lots of changes in the past few months. In June, the Office along with the Office on the Status of Women moved into Annex K, 2150 Bishop. This fall the Consultative Committee on Employment Equity welcomed three new members. Pat Winston (NUSGWUE) replaced Rosalie Taylor, Pat Freed (CUNASA) replaced Pat Verret and Claudie Solar, as the incoming Advisor to the Rector on the Status of Women, joined the committee.

Since the spring, work has continued on the Diagnostic Report. It is expected that the section on the Academic Sector will be ready later this term with the Non-Academic Sector Report ready in the spring. While originally it was hoped to have a single report on the situation of female employees throughout the University, certain information on education and experience that will be forthcoming from the Job Evaluation

Program has made it impossible to undertake the availability analysis for this group of jobs until later this fall.

Both reports will be similarly structured, that is, there will be sections on a snapshot portrait, availability analysis and results from reviews of the various employment systems.

Much of the work this summer involved the design and distribution of a questionnaire to deal with the recruitment, selection, reappointment, promotion and tenure for faculty. The responses from the department chairs have been very encouraging but some of the information needs to be handled by a follow-up interview.

Many departments have already responded to one of Employment Equity's main objectives which is to widen their recruitment efforts to seek out qualified female candidates. The next article will look at the statistics for new hires over the past two years.

For further information regarding Employment Equity, contact Kathleen Perry, Employment Equity Coordinator, K-120, 4841.

Mayor Doré calls for increased university funding

Government, business and students must pitch in

by Donna Varrica

Montréal is a city privileged to have four universities, but government, business and students must contribute more toward their continued growth. This was the message Montréal Mayor Jean Doré brought to delegates last Thursday at the Fourth International Urban Universities Conference, jointly hosted by Concordia and the University of Alabama at Birmingham.

The Government of Québec must realize that a significant increase in the financing of Montréal universities is integral to the total development strategy of the metropolitan area, he said.

Mayor Doré added that increased federal grant money was also needed to aid research and development if the city is to retain its leadership in high technology fields such as biotechnology, aeronautics and aerospace and engineering.

He urged that a tuition fee increase be considered, saying that the 20-year freeze on fees should not be viewed as a sacred cow. He added, though, that student contributions alone would not alleviate the problems of underfunding and that the wider community should help to ease the burden. The mayor called on corporations and the private sector to provide more generous support.

"Québec lags behind the rest of Canada where private sector support for institutions is a tradition," he said.

Mayor Doré praised his city as a true university centre, lauding both the accessibility of education here and the spirit of international co-operation created by multiple university exchanges.

Mayor Doré also said the City of Montréal is using its universities more and more for expertise, instead of hiring consultants. Some projects he cited with university links include a study of waste management, fluoridation in the St. Lawrence River, and Concordia's own Centre for Building Studies' wind simulation study.

"We (the city and its universities) are trying to jointly develop a new way of doing things so we can use knowledge for the benefit of our citizens and all of mankind," he said.

...Congratulations to incumbent Member of the National Assembly Jacques Chagnon, who represents the riding of St-Louis, which takes in our downtown campus. New MNA in Notre Dame de Grâce, which includes our west-end campus, is Equality Party member Gordon Atkinson...

...October 10th is the deadline for applications to the Shastri Indo-Canadian Institute Fellowship Competition for research and study in India. Categories: faculty, post-doctoral research, student and performing arts. For more information or application forms, contact: Kay de la Ronde, Executive Director, Shastri Indo-Canadian Institute, 2500 University Drive N.W., Calgary, Alberta T2N 1N4; (220-7467)...

...But if your area is science or engineering: For a second year, the Canada Scholarships Program encourages 2,500 top students a year, especially young women, to study science and engineering. The scholarships, worth $2,000 each, can be renewed for three years provided that students maintain first-class standing. Eligibility: any Canadian citizen or permanent resident, registered as a full-time student in an eligible discipline in a recognized post-secondary institution in Canada...

...And speaking of awards, Civil Engineering's Zenon A. Zielinski is a member of the Prestressed Concrete Institute (PCI)'s Committee on Connection Details which recently received the PCI Certificate of Merit for the committee's report, Design and Typical Details of Connections for Precast and Prestressed Concrete, which was published as a 270 page, hard cover manual. The award was made "for a report judged to be technically outstanding and most worthy of special commendation for its merit as a contribution to the advancement of precast and/or prestressed concrete."

...Sociology & Anthropology's David Howes was invited to be the panel moderator on "Current Issues in the Anthropological Discourse: Canadian Contributions and Directions," at the recent Critical Anthropology Graduate Research Conference at York University. Publishing-wise, he has an article, "La Domestication de la Pensée Juridique Québécoise" in Anthropologie de Société. He presented a shorter version of the paper — which analyzes the impact of certain changes pertaining to legal thought in the 19th and early 20th century Québec — at the Learned Societies Meetings. Also, his paper, "The Origin and Demise of Legal Education in Québec (or Hercules Bound)," appears in the University of New Brunswick Law Journal. At the Canadian Ethnological Society Meeting he presented Textual Anthropology: A Québec and Anthropology of the Senses: An Introduction...

...Fine Arts (Music)'s Valerie Kinslow (soprano) and Sherman Friedland (classical clarinet) recently toured Nova Scotia as the Mannheim Trio, performing the music of Mozart on original instruments, accompanied by Boyd McDonald (fortepiano) of Wilfred Laurier University. The group toured under the auspices of Musique Royale, performing concerts in Yarmouth, Annapolis Royal, Pictou, Halifax, Louisbourg — performing in the Chapel of the Fortress by candlelight — and River Denys. The CBC recorded the group in the Chapel at Louisbourg for broadcast on November 19th...

...Economics' Liu Zeng-Rung recently delivered a speech on "China's Economic System and Reforms" at the University of Vermont at the invitation of its College of Education and Social Science...

...Marketing's Ulrike de Brentani presented her research on "New Service Development in the Business Services Sector" at the Marketing Science Institute, in Cambridge, Mass. She will also have her article "Success and Failure in New Industrial Services" published in the Journal of Product Innovation Management in December...

...Signing off with a welcome to someone who signed on board: Johanne Richard is now working in Purchasing. Welcome.

Food for Thought

For cockroaches, ants, and silverfish
Your leftovers make a tasty dish.
Your apple cores and crusts of bread
Allow the rats to stay well fed.
And in a building of this size
Your care could help to minimize
The little pests we can't divert
From thinking books make great desert.
We try to clean but need your help
To stamp the little vermin out.
We've asked before but you ignore
The Signs we place by every door.
This time we hope you'll heed our plea.

For if you don't you soon may see
That when you've had your coffee break
Your sandwiches, your piece of cake
And settled with the library book
You need to pass a course you took
You'll open it and know you're doomed
Chapter 4 has been consumed.

New ILL Hours

If you are a user of the Inter-Library Loans (ILL) Service, you will be happy to know that the service hours at the Norris Library have been extended. You may now visit the ILL Office (N-413) between 8:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m.

At Loyola Campus, Vanier's ILL Office (VL-121) offers service between 8:30 a.m. (when the building opens) and 5:00 p.m. Special arrangements can be made at Vanier if these hours are not convenient for you. Enquire about these at the ILL Office or Reference Desk. ILL request cards may still be dropped off at the Reference Desks of all Libraries during Reference Services hours.

In Memoriam

On August 8, 1989, the world lost a wonderful person. Helen Ellison was tragically killed in a plane crash while on a ski vacation in New Zealand. Her fiancé, John Lawson (a Sir George Williams University graduate) also perished in the accident.

Helen worked for Concordia University for 18 years and was well known to staff in many departments. The major portions of her career at Concordia were spent in the Government Publications and Microforms Unit of the Norris Library, and more recently in the Science and Engineering Library where she was Reference Unit Supervisor. Both of these positions involved assisting students and faculty members in the use of the Library. Helen was pursuing her Bachelor of Arts degree with a major in Library Studies.

We will remember Helen as a cheerful, funny, generous and extremely compassionate person. We will miss her smile and words of encouragement. Helen's own emotional strength through devastating personal losses made her a role model for many.

The void left by the passing of our friend, Helen, will not be easily filled but fond memories will endure.

Dialogue

Here are a few samples of the questions that people have asked at the Reference/Information Desks in Concordia libraries:

QUESTION: Can the Library provide information on the best colors to have in an environment frequented by elderly people — particularly a geriatric unit of a hospital?

ANSWER: There are many ways of approaching this topic but the following are a sample of what may be found in various units of Concordia's Libraries:

1) Canada. Department of Health and Welfare. Facilities for the Elderly in Canada: Design and Environmental Considerations, Volume 1: Geriatric Units in Hospitals. H 39-78/1984-1 (Norris Government Publications and Microforms Unit).

Psychotherapy with the boring patient.

Taylor, Graeme J.

U Toronto, Canada

Canadian Journal of Psychiatry, 1984 Apr Vol 29(3) 217-222

CODEN: CPAJAK ISSN: 07067437

Journal Announcement: 7207

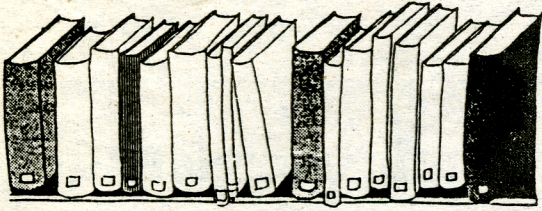

Language: ENGLISH Document Type: JOURNAL ARTICLE

Discusses the problems of certain difficult patients who have the capacity to evoke such boredom in their psychotherapists, that, and unless technical modifications are used, therapy quickly reaches an impasse and may be terminated on the grounds that the patient is "not psychologically minded." Chronically boring patients have an impaired capacity for symbolization and can be identified by their nonsymbolic communicative style. This reflects an inner struggle with primitive mental states due to fixation at, or regression to, the paranoid-schizoid developmental position. The patient may use projective identification to discharge unbearable psychic tension into the therapist whose boredom is partly a defense against this. Alternatively, the patient may create impenetrable barriers with language by making "attacks on linking" that are tantamount to attacks on the therapist's peace of mind. The therapist should initially interpret the form and function of the patients' communications rather than the contents. He or she can help the patient acquire a greater capacity for symbolization, including the ability to accurately label and verbalize different affective experiences. Careful analysis of the countertransference will identify the patient's projective identifications, provide valuable information about the patient's primitive mental life, and prevent antitherapeutic projective counter-identifications. Geology Transferred to Vanier

But check! Some items must remain at the downtown campus, while others are not yet in place

Concordia's Libraries are always ready to try to accommodate their users. When the Geology Department requested a transfer of geology books and journals from the Science and Engineering Library (SEL) to the "new and improved" Vanier Library, the system was quickly put into action. The move was deemed appropriate since the hub of geology activity at Concordia is on the west-end campus.

As a result, all books with the call numbers beginning with the letters QE and some with the letters TN are now at the Vanier Library. In the Library of Congress Classification, QE corresponds to geology and TN to mining engineering and metallurgy. Most of the geology journals have also been moved.

Excluded from this shift are geology-related government publications from the Québec provincial and Canadian federal jurisdictions. Their exclusion is due to the fact that they are received on a depository basis and must stay put! Also staying at SEL are books falling into the Library of Congress Classification numbers corresponding to remote sensing, geophysics, and earth structure. This is for the benefit of the Geography and Physics Departments. Books that are currently in storage will remain there until next summer.

The Cataloguing Department is presently working on generating new cards for the card catalogue. These will accurately show the new location of books. Until that part of the project is finished, users will have to refer to the Circulation Desks for the precise location of books. The latest edition of the Serials Holdings List has the new locations and holdings for the transferred journals. Any confusion as to the location of any item can be cleared up by Reference Librarians at both libraries. Unfortunately, the geology periodical indexes which have been transferred to Vanier are still listed as being downtown. This will be corrected on the next Serials List.

Although librarians from SEL, Vanier, and Cataloguing have directed the move, much of the credit for the smooth transition must go to the many Library Assistants who have been involved. The quality of their work reflects much professionalism, precision, and meticulousness.

Librarians and Library Assistants alike will continue to provide the best help possible to any user needing geology materials.

Subject Librarians

All departments at Concordia University have a Subject Librarian who is responsible for developing the Library's collection (books, journals, non-print materials), providing specialized reference services (consultations on research strategies, online searches) and formally instructing groups within the Department on effective Library use. Since the last issue of Library News appeared, there have been many changes to the listing of Subject Librarians. There are some new faces on staff and other librarians have returned from administrative or sabbatical leaves, causing a major shuffle in responsibilities.

Keeping Informed

Library News is a four-times-a-year feature prepared for The Thursday Report by Concordia Librarians. Library News gives you a chance to keep up to date with the latest developments in the Concordia Libraries. We hope that Library News will attract comments, contributions, etc.

If you have something to say, simply write to The Thursday Report, and if you have something to include in Library News, please contact the editor, Lee Harris, at 848-7724.

NAMES IN THE NEWS

Of exercise, computers and literary presses

by Donna Varrica

James Gavin, a professor in the department of Applied Social Science, lent his expertise in exercise psychology to The Toronto Sun in an article about people looking for the right exercise regimen.

Those user-friendly computer people at the Computer Centre got a write-up in the trade journal Direction Informatique for the conference they organized last spring called "Networking 89: Towards an Integrated Network Solution."

The work of Jerome Krause, a professor of Painting and Drawing, was praised at length by Nancy Baele, the Visual Arts critic for The Ottawa Citizen, when a show of his landscapes was mounted in Ottawa.

Last week's column mentioned Arthur Kroker's Panic Encyclopedia. This week the panic is of another variety. Kroker, a professor of Political Science and Humanities, was quoted in The Canadian Medical Association Journal from Ottawa, voicing his concern that people with AIDS have become the focus of all mankind's fears.

Paul Fazio, Director of the Centre for Building Studies, was pictured with an accompanying item in Les Affaires last spring in a larger article about research in the construction industry.

An old clipping from a January edition of The Whig-Standard (Kingston, Ontario) turned up, appropriately about Nancy Marrelli, Archives Co-ordinator, in a lengthy article about one of her extracurricular activities. Marrelli works with her husband, Simon Dardick, a part-time lecturer in the English Department, on Véhicule Editions, the little Montréal press that could.

Alcan Aluminum's internal publication Rendez-Vous put one of their employees, librarian Denise Turnbull, on centre stage with a profile of her achievements. The Concordia connection: Turnbull graduated from the Library Studies program in 1983 and was very visible recently in Montréal-area ads designed by the University to promote the program.

Trevor Gould, a professor in the department of Sculpture, Ceramics and Fibres, and one of his students, Elaine Saucier, made news in Le Journal L'Action in Joliette last summer when a banner she designed representing 13 towns in the Lanaudière region was put on exhibit during the Festival internationale de Lanaudière.

CONCORDIA UNIVERSITY 1989 FALL CONVOCATION INFORMATION TO POTENTIAL GRADUATES

A University Convocation for all Faculties will be held at Salle Wilfrid-Pelletier, Place des Arts, on Monday, November 20th at 2:00 p.m.

On November 3, 1989, students will be notified by letter of the successful completion of their degree program. This letter will also give information about academic dress, tickets and convocation procedures.

Students are advised to check with the Students' Accounts Office to ensure that all student fees, library fines and graduation fees have been paid. Students are requested to pay their accounts with money-order, certified cheque, or cash by November 10, 1989, in order to be permitted to participate in the convocation ceremony or receive their degrees.

Any graduate requiring special services during the convocation ceremonies (e.g., escort, special seating, etc.) because of a physical handicap, please contact Ann Kerby, Co-ordinator of Handicapped Services, at 848-3501.

Rewarding academic excellence

Advisory board to focus on fellowship applications

In this conclusion to a three-part series about the funding of graduate fellowships at Concordia, the Dean of the Department of Graduate Studies sounds an optimistic note about the future. Previous articles have focused on plans for 'education' seminars which were held earlier this week, and about where Concordia stands in relation to other universities.

by Barbara Verity

If the Dean of Graduate Studies, Manfred Szabo, has his way, the budget for Concordia graduate fellowships will go from $269,000 to $1 million in the next five years. This would boost the number of fellowships at Concordia from 20 to 100.

This goal is part of Szabo's plan to provide better levels of funding for Concordia graduate students. He also recently held a series of seminars for program directors, thesis supervisors and undergraduate student counsellors to help improve the success rate for Concordia students in applications for fellowships.

This fall, Szabo is creating an advisory committee of representatives from within the University and beyond in order to devise a strategy for achieving his goal. Representatives will bring a broad range of opinion from the business, financial and academic sectors, and they will include experts in fundraising.

Five-year plan

The current rate of funding only allows Concordia fellowships to be awarded to between 1- and 3% of those who apply. The per capita funding for the 1,500 full-time graduate students is only $179, well below that of many other Canadian universities.

If the funding level is brought to $1 million, individual Concordia fellowships could be increased from the current $6,500 to $10,000, Szabo says. If this increase happened under the current funding level, only 48 students each year could receive funding — 24 at the Master's level and 24 at the Doctoral level. The increase, however, would provide support for 182 fellows at a time — 92 at the Master's level and 90 at the Doctoral level.

Increased funding would allow Concordia to drop the current system whereby a graduate student receiving both a Concordia fellowship and another from an external agency must return part of the Concordia fellowship. The Dean would like students to be able to keep both.

"We want to reward academic excellence and thereby attract some of the best students to Concordia. By making Concordia a first-choice university at the graduate level, many students with external funding will choose Concordia. We will also attract excellent students who aren't eligible for outside funding," Szabo says.

He admits his goal is an ambitious one.

"We will proceed cautiously — but with optimism," he concludes.

Stephanie Manuel, Director of Admissions in the Division of Graduate Studies (at left), and Robert Kavanagh, Executive Secretary, are working along with Dean Manfred Szabo (not shown) to increase fellowships for our graduate students. They are shown here in the entrance area of the newly-renovated Graduate Studies Building on Mackay St.
